Struggle for New York Heightens as Dinkins Fights to Hold Voters

By Thomas B. Edsall Washington Past Service

NEW YORK - The raily at Concord Baptist Church of Christ. a mainstay of Brookhyn's black political power structure. was meant to revive the spirit that made David N. Dinkins the city's first black mayor four years ago. But as Mr. Dinkins spoke to the gathering in the heart of Bedford-Stuyvesant, where Democrats worry about turnout on Tuesday. his mind dwelled more on the past.

Mr. Dinkins spoke of going ioto neighbor-hoods, clearly white, where he knew be would get no votes, but still finding childreo crowded around him.

"The fact that they come around and they are friendly instead of recoiling suggests that their parents are oot saying improper things around the dinner table." he said. "That doesn't mean they like me and are going to vote for me. That's all right, that's O.K.. But they are not teaching their children to hate, and that's good."

At the end of his talk, he seemed to ac-knowledge the possibility of serving only one term: "Let me leave you with my gratitude for permitting me to get this far. For had you not supported me in 1989, I would not be standing here as the 106th mayor of New Vert York."

Polls show the race between Mr. Dinkins and Rudolpb W. Giuliani. the Republican candidate, as very close: Mr. Dinkins has ao edge io most surveys, but pollsters warn that in black-versus-white contests, whites some-times are reluctant to say they are voung against a black.

The outcome depends on two groups, liberal-to-moderate Jews and Latinos, key constituencies that enlarged Mr. Dinkins's base among the 28 percent of the electorate that is black into a bare majority to 1989, Jews have defected in droves, and the Latino vote is up for grabs.

The now-fraying black-Latino-liberal Jew-ish alliance was forged in 1988 by the Reverend Jesse L. Jackson. In the years since, demographic trends have strengthened the Raiobow Coalition, with the exodus from the city of generally conservative whites, a modest increase in the black population and a sharp increase in the number of Latinos. But Mr. Dinkins has had trouble maintaining his base. Hispanic voters, angered over his perceived favoritism to blacks and a claimed lack of Latino appointments, were leaning toward Mr. Giuliani, but in recent weeks they have been returning to the Democratic fold.

A far more serious problem for Mr. Dinkins has grown out of his acknowledged delays and mishandling of the violent confron-tation between blacks and Jews in Brooklyn's Crown Heights oeighborhood. The fury over a 24-hour delay io strong police response produced widespread defections from once reliably Democratic Jewish voters, and the Jewish vote is running more than 2 to 1 against Mr. Dinkins.

But most serious of all for Mr. Dinkins is that the city entered into a severe recession just before he won office. Regardless of who. if anyone, is responsible, the Dinkins years have been defined in large part by the loss of more than 350,000 jobs, welfare rolls that have soared to 1.1 million and steadily rising homelessness

Whatever the outcome on Tuesday, Mr. Dinkins in the last oine weeks has performed the remarkable feat of making himself compentive.

He has drawn on two central parts of his character: his roots in the New York Democratic organizatioo --- the alliance of political clubs, churches, unions and civil liberties and civil rights groups - and a powerful courtliness, his commitment to being a gentleman in the public arena.

Just two months ago, these characteristics were liabilities, Mr. Giuliani, clong the decay. crime and disorder of the streets and subways of New York, characterized Mr. Dinkins as a clubhouse pol, totally out of his league. Mr. Dinkins's courtesy, in turn, was seen as iote-gral to an ingrained diffidence and caution onal Henaid Tribune BRUSSELS — The community of 12 West European nations gives birth to a union Mon-day, but no one will be celebrating. The entry into force of the Maastricht Treaty on European Union ends a bitter 18-month ratification campaign, but Europe remains di-vided over how far and how fast to press its political and economic integration, and wary of the opposition that Maastricht aroused.

The treaty's ambitious promises — a single European currency, a common foreign and de-lense policy and a virtual European citizenship - are years away, at best.

Meanwhile, Europe's most pressing chal-lenges — restoring economic growth and con-tributing to a global trade accord, areas of longstanding European cooperation — offer no prospects of quick resolution.

The sober ontlook was evident at a summit meeting of European leaders here Friday. Even the most ardent advocates of deeper integration the most ardent advocates of deeper integration sounded chastened by the opposition to the Maastricht treaty, which was initially rejected by referendum in Denmark, then won narrow passage in France and nearly brought down the government of Prime Minister John Major of Britain:

The leaders said in their declaration that the ratification debate had been "salutary" in re-vealing the weaknesses of a Europe that "seemed distant, anonymous and interfering." They promised a Europe "close to the citizen and intervening only where necessary to pursue our common interests.

Mr. Major declared victory for Britain's at-tempt to curb the reach of the EC's bureaucracy and preserve the supremacy of national govern-

"The concerns that we have had about the old, the narrow and the centralizing vision of Europe, those concerns and doubts are shared right across the Community," he said,

But Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene of Belgium, who led the meeting, made it clear that Continental leaders were determined to implement Maastricht-even if the treaty was "not a miracle cure," The hope of Mr. Dehaene and other Euro-optimists is that the Maastricht machinery for coordinating economic, security and justice policies between member states will stay in place until there is the political will to use it.

officer to walk his beat with a ventriloquist's dummy.

The ballot measure is a spot of comic relief in an otherwise uninspiring off-year election here and seems popular with voters in the North Beach neighborhood where the officer. Bob Geary, 53, and the dummy, Brendan O'Smarty, had worked without a peep of official complaint until a series of high-level changes in the police department.

The dummy's silly woodeo face made lost children giggle, quieted domestic disputes and encouraged homeless people to move from doorways.

But after a new chief took charge at in the department. Mr. Geary was told that the dummy was O.K. at youth and community events, but not on patrol, when he would need written permission each time he waoted to take Brendan out of the trunk.

How ridiculous, Mr. Geary thought, that a cop is trusted to decide when to use bis gun but not his duranty! So he spent $10,000 of his own money to gather the 9,964 signatures

Yet the measure, Proposition BB, has in spired harrumphs of disapproval from some city officials and editorial boards in a city that once boasted of its eccentricity but oow seems determined to pass for normal.

Critics say that it trivializes the initiative process, costs the city thousands of dollars in typesetting costs and raises the specter that any public employee who bas a fight with his boss will put the matter on the ballot. In the argument against the measure in the city's 234-page voter information pamphlet. the police chief. Anthooy D. Ribera, says that "a declaration of policy which permits a police officer to exercise unfettered judgment as to when he uses his partner puppet while on duty is an unwarranted precedent detrimental to the good order and efficiency of a paramilitary enforcement agency." In person, the chief is a bit wittier about the matter, but not much.

Officer Geary just rolls his eyes. "You would think the city would inhale this experience," he said. "I'm just trying to help make this place livable."

New Constitution Gets 55% of Vote in Peru

LIMA (Combined Dispatches) - Peruvians approved a new coostitution on Sunday, opening the way for President Alberto Fujmori's re-election bid in 1995, according to projections by the Apoyo polling agency.

Apoyo said 55.3 percent of voters supported the new charter in a referendum, while 44.7 percent voted against it. The projections were based on interviews with voters at polling stations around the country.

Maoist Shining Path guerrillas launched attacks on the eve of the vote. The guerrillas detonated bombs in central Lima, damaging a congressional building and a Foreign Ministry office next to it, the police said. No injuries were reported. Mr. Fujintori sus-pended the old constitution, dissolved the legislature and seized special powers in April 1992, saying the moves were necessary to get control of the economy and put down the Shining Path insurgency. # 3 French Consular Aides Freed in Raids in Algeria

By Youssef M. Ibrahim New York Times Service

PARIS - Three French consular employces kidnapped in Algeria a week ago were freed by Algerian security forces on Saturday night and Sunday in raids that resulted in the deaths of at least six of their Islamic fundamentalist abductors.

The three French nationals - Jean-Claude Theyenot, his wife Michèle, and Alain Freisier - were abducted cear their home in downtown Algiers on Oct. 24.

When the two Frenchmen landed Sunday night in Paris after being flown home on a government plane, they said that they had been treated well by their captors, Mrs. Thévenot, who was freed on Sunday, reportedly remained at the French Embassy in Algiers on Sunday night.

During the week, paniphlets distributed throughout Algeria in the name of an armed faction, the Islamic Armed Group, took responsibility for the kidnappings.

It was the first time since anti-government Islamic milltants began attacks against foreigners in September that hostages had been freed after being abducted.

Two French surveyors who were taken hostage were found dead on Sept. 21, and three foreign oil workers employed by an Italian concern were also abducted and killed. In addition, two Russian military officers were shot and killed on Oct. 16.

A former senior Algerian government official now in France said the two warring sides in Algeria - the ruling class of largely Francophile officials and the Islamic fundamentalists - were at a point where "neither side can win militarily and therefore anticipate orgoniating with each other from a positon of maximum force."

The official said the abduction and then "the freeing of the three French nationals was , part of "this process of negotiations."

The Islamic Armed Group, which appears to represent the toughest of the Islamic fun-damentalist factions battling the government. has taken responsibility for the kidnapping and killing of the five foreigners as well as other assassinations.

A variety of Islamic armed groups have been locked virtually in guerrilla warfare with Algerian security forces since Jo mary 1991. leading to the deaths of nearly . 9 19 Algerians in clashes. But it was only it. Aptember that the conflict widened to emb. foreigners living in Algeria.

The abduction of the three French nationals caused major concern in France, provoking the departure of some of the 76,000 French nationals and Algerians holding French citizenship, as well as advice from Britain and Germany to their citizens to leave the country.

Privately, French officials voiced concern on Sunday over the rapid deterioration of law and order in Algeria, revealed in daily inci-dents in which militants, civilians and members of the armed forces are being killed. The severity of the conflict is magnified by a series of weekly arson attacks against factories. farms, forests and schools.

Roland Dumas, the former French foreign minister, warned that Algeria stood on the verge of an "explosion," with serious implications for France, where 2 million to 3 million Algerians live as legal or illegal immigrants.

Triathlete Cambridge Don Raises Funds (and Hopes)

By Erik Ipsen International Herald Tribune CAMBRIDGE, England — Sarah Springman is slowing down, or so she says. "I don't bave to keep proving my-self every minute," she insists, contrast-ing that with the bad old days when, she admits, "even if I were just buttering bread I had to be the fastest,"

Miss Springman. 36, has proved herself repeatedly, and spectacularly. Her victories range from the University Prize at Cambridge for her undergraduate work in soil mechanics to her demoliuon of all rivals in the national squash cham-pionship of Fiji. Not incidentally, she was the first woman to be made a research fellow at Magdalene College of Cambridge, as well as twice the first woman to break the tape at the finish line of the European triathlon championships

At 6 feet 1 inch tall, with the measured gait of an athlete and the hardened handsbake of a foundry worker. Sarah Springman cannot be mistaken for just another Cambridge don. And she may protest that she has mellowed, but there is no denying her enduring drive.

She does not leave you in any doubt as to what her immediate objectives are." said Malcolm Bolton, a fellow Cambridge lecturer.

In the near term, she is busy writing a new course on underground structures ---everything from road tunnels to libraries -- that she will teach next year. Longer term, she ponders whether to take her acknowledged skills at setting goals and winning others over to them into public service, and even politics.

Every night after she has completed a dozen or so simulated miles on her turbotrainer stationary bicycle in the corner of her living room, Miss Springman tunes in "Parliament Today" on BBC Radio 4 and thinks politics. "I have thought about it in great detail," she says. "I see a lot of things going wrong, and I am not happy about i

To say that she is driven is like describing Alain Prost as a motorist or Mother Teresa as kind. "She always had the need to achieve." said Pat Lancaster, who was headmistress at Wycombe Abbey School. from which Miss Springman went on to Cambridge as an undergraduate. And she is not selective about where to apply herself; it happens no matter what she undertakes. During her undergraduate years, for instance, she entered the Territorial Army's officer training pro-gram, at first merely to make a bit of extra money (£5 a day). But she rose to the rank of captain and ultimately com-manded the Royal Engineers Wing for four years.

Arnid the slightly eroded gothic splen-dor of Magdalene College, Sarah Spring-man is still striving. As an academic, her challenges are to get practicing engineers to stop treating soil like dirt - to realize that it, too, can be sculpted and reinforced to achieve a higher (load-bearing) potential - and to get her students to think that engineering can be exciting. "One of the things I want to get across is that engineering is not just the boring manipulation of figures, that there is a lot of creativity involved," she says. She traces her interest in the field to childhood summers spent honing her talents as a master dam builder on the windswept beaches of County Cork in Ireland. And while working to instill excitement and a sense of mission in her students, she labors to get ever more from the college, which she and others invariably describe as "not rich." She hopes among other things to find the fuel to teach new courses and run new research diects. Her colleagues feel she could eventually win a full professorship or be stolen away to head un engineering school else-where. "In every field she touches she is a marvelous example of what organization and dedication can do for you," soid Jeffery Lewins. Magdalene's director of engineering studies. At Cambridge, colleagues say that she quickly achieved a profile highly unusual for a mere research fellow. "Whatever she sets her mind to doing you get the sense she will be smashing at it." a former army colleague said.

A classic case was the two years she spent in the tropical jungles of Fiji in the early 1980s. There, she labored as the quality-control expert on a bydroelectric search grants from the European Community and the British government to her credit, and with 22 researchers at her service, she has proved herself one of the college's best salespeople

Last year, she expanded on that record by convincing local engineering firms that British engineers should be able to work abroad and that they needed language training to do it. Nudged and nurtured by Miss Springman as project leader, several companies and two foreign governments eventually ponied up £200.000 to build a language lab for the college, It opened this year.

And then there were the races. In 10 years of competition in triathlons around the world. Miss Springman has proved herself as few others have. She started in the sport to overcome her disappointment on being told she would never be a world-class lacrosse player.

If ever there were a sport suited to Miss Springman it is the triathlon: 1.5 kilometers of open water swimming, followed by 40 kilometers of bicycling and culminating, if one is both good and lucky, roughly 2 and a half hours after it all began at the finish line of a 10-kilometer านอ

And those are the dimensions merely of the standard triathlon. The event is notorious for its variety of distances and the multiplicity of terrains it covers. Miss Springman's 100 triathlons have included several of the so-called Iron Man variety, ordeals that typically go nine hours and more.

"It was trying something that sounded almost impossible and something most people found crazy," she recalls. She has won 11 British and 2 European triathlon championships while swallowing sea water and succumbing to nausea as she raced through forests.

Miss Springman is an inspiration. her colleagues say. "Of course, she has got talent." Mr. Lewins says. "But that talent has been organized, geared and applied." It is that success — and its highly visible rewards. from her niche at the college to ber scores of sports trophies — that makes her what Mr. Lewins lauds as a "role model."

Miss Springman is not so sure. She worries that as a leading authority on bridge abutments she is aiding in the littering of the landscape with "ribbons of tarmac." And then there are the worries that 15 years spent at Cambridge have been too much, too easy - that it is all too far from the young Springman in the photo on the mantel in her office valiantly slogging her way across the English Channel in goggles and cap.

"If you have got everything under control then your curiosity as a researcher is not alive anymore," she says.

Not that her mother, the self-professed source of her ambition, ever fell into that trap. She reared four children and eventually left the house to seek her challenges as a Tory politician.

It was from her mother, who died three years ago, that Miss Springman inherited her love of sports and of winning. Asked whether she plays to win, she replies instantly, "Oh completely."

The Springmans' backyard tennis court in suburban London became the scene of regular tests of wills in her growing-up years.

Then, too, Miss Springman scientist is not above finding cosmic causes for the drive she came to share with her mother. "We are both Capricorns," she says.

SEOUL (AP) — The U.S. defense secretary. Les Aspin, says a "crisis" is looming unless North Korea acts to clear up suspicions about its nuclear program.

"The ball is in the North Korean court." he said in an interview published Sunday by the Korea Times, an English-language newspaper in Secul. "If they want to avoid a crisis, they will have to make the next move to honor their international commitments."

Talks between North Korea and the United States have bogged down over the Communist state's refusal to allow full-scale inspections of Ma nuclear installations by the International Atomic Energy Agency. De-spite its denials. North Korea is suspected of trying to build a nuclear bomb. The issue will top Mr. Aspin's agenda when he visits Seoul and Tokyo next week for security talks.

JERUSALEM (AFP) - Jewish settlers warned Sunday that they would adopt the violent methods of a militant Palestinian group, which earlier claimed responsibility for the murder of a settler. A spokesman for the settlers, Aaron Domb, said on Israeli radio that if Jews were prevented from moving around the West Bank normally anu Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin compared the settlers to the Islamic Resistance Movement. or Hamas, "We shall start behaving like Hamas." Dozens of settlers placed burning tires across main roads early Sunday to protest the killing of a youth by Palestinian militants. Mr. Domb said settlers would block main roads in the West Bank again Monday.

Mr. Rabin has criticized both Hamas and the Israeli settlers who are opposed to peace between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization. "Our task is to beat the enemies and opponents of peace," he said Saturday, "because either of them could pull down the peace process."

SAN SALVADOR (Reviers) - The second former leftist guerrilla leader in a week has been killed by unidentified assassins, a spokesman for the Farabundo Maril National Liberation Front said.

The guerrilla leader, Heleno Hernán Castro, 36, was found shot w death in a vehicle located along a highway in eastern El Salvador, the spokesman said. Mr. Castro led one of the five groups that made up the party, which began as an alliance of leftist rebels who fought the government during El Salvador's 12-year-long civil war.

The government issued a statement that it "energetically" condemned the killing and that President Alfredo Cristiani had given instructions to conduct a thorough investigation. Another former rebel leader, Francisco Velis, was shot and killed og Oct. 25 as he walked with his year-old daughter in a middle-class neighborhood in San Salvador.

NEW YORK -- The New York City Department of Parks and

NEW YORK — The New York City Department of Parks and Recreation officials has reported progress on a matter of pressing concern to many here: They said a company had agreed to install 30 public toilets in and around lhe city's parks by March 1995. The announcement came amid a long-delayed effort by the city's Department of Transportation to install as many as 200 public toilets on city streets. It also came less than a month after two other companies withdrew their bids to install toilets in the parks, saying that the city would not allow them to display enough advertising on the toilets and nearby kicks.

the toilets and nearby klosks. Betsy Gotbaum, the city's parks commissioner, said the company, Wall Verkehrsanlagen of Berlin, had agreed to provide the toilets on terms similar to those rejected by the two other companies. The German concern, which is under contract to provide similar pay toilets in Berlin and Moscow, said it would install and maintain the 30 toilets, each measuring 8 feet by 10 feet. (2.4 meters by 3 meters) at no cost to the city.

SAN FRANCISCO -- Genetieists have identified the most common genetic defect that gives rise to hemophilia, a disease that causes uncontrolled hleeding, the Univer-sity of California at San Francisco said Sunday.

The discovery, made by a team of scientists from the University of California at San Francisco and Johns Hopkins University, means that the defect can now be detected easily in families affected by it, enabling them to know the likeli-hood of passing on the faulty gene.

The newly discovered defect is responsible for about 20 percent of all hemophilia cases and for up to half of the most severe cases, the researchers said. It occurs in the gene responsible for the most prevalent form of the disorder, called hemophilia-A.

Haitian officials said that the authority of Father Aristide and his interim prime minister, Robert Malval, had ended at midnight Saturday, the deadline for his bome-coming under the terms of a UNbrokered agreement signed July 3 by Father Aristide and the Haitian Army chief, Lieutenant General Raoul Cédras.

Reynold Georges, leader of the Liberal Alliance for the Advance-ment of Haiti, said, "We will have a new government very soon.* Twelve political parties and pres-

Washington Part Service SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — As the second winter of war approaches, Ann and Tomislav Zigic have turned to gathering and picking kisa, a celery-like wild grass that grows all over this Serb-treat the second second second second second second second plot, canning green tomatoes, installing a wood heater between two rooms, and collecting fire wood on the lower slopes of Mount Zuc — when it is not under Serb shell fire. Like many Sarajevans, the Zigices, a retired couple in their 60s.

Like many Sarajevans, the Zigices, a retired couple in their 60s, feel better prepared for this winter's ordeal than last year. Their fixation is not so much on food as on heat and the coming cold.

"What can we do?" asks Mr. Zigic, a civil engineer who traveled the world for a big Yugoslav construction company before the war. "Our fate depends on whether we get gas and electricity." Igor and Mika Baros, opticians, also have heat and cold foremost on their minds. They, too, have done everything possible to prepare for the sub-zero weather that lies ahead like a long nightmare. Their attic is filled with wood bought at the equivalent of $200 a square meter; they have jerry-rigged a gas line from their neighbor's home into theirs for heating and cooking, and they have earmarked which furniture they will hum before they tear to their narmet floor which furniture they will burn before they tear up their parquet floor. when their wood supply runs out.

But they, too, say that the key to this war-battered city's survival this winter comes down to the question of whether there will be sufficient gas or electricity for heating. Without them, they see Sarajevo doomed to living through a frigid hell.

"We're under arrest bere until spring once again," a resigned Mrs. Baros said. "Even if we get the gas to get through this winter, we know the war will just pick up again in the spring."

As the tast autumn leaves blow away and the first cold days begin, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is warning that Bosnia is once again "on the brink of a major humanitarian disaster." Yet, for the first time to this 19-month-long war, the alarm is not ringing for Sarajevo itself. According to relief officials, this long-suffering city is relatively well off and should pull through a second winter short of catastrophe, provided there is electricity, fuel and gas.

Instead, these officials expect the center of this winter's troubles to be central Bosnia, which has been largely cut off from commercial and relief supplies for months, and five Serb-surrounded Muslim enclaves to eastern and northern Bosnia.

"Sarejevo is going to be the garden spot of Bosnia this winter compared to central Bosnia, at least as long as the airlift lasts here," said Ray Wilkinson, a commission spokesman.

UN relief officials are even warning that Serbia may be worse off than Sarajevo, facing disaster for the first time because of the effects of UN-imposed economic and financial sanctions. Using the acronym for the former republic of Yogoslavia, or FRY, a commission document said: "The scarcity of food, fael, medicine and other basic goods means that a humanitarian disaster in the FRY is a very real possibility this winter as well."

Yet ironically, it is to Belgrade and the Bosnian Serbs' self-proclaimed "Srpska Republic" that UN relief officials are now unning increasingly for the safe passage of relief supplies into central and eastern Bosnia. For months now, the only convoys that have regularly reached their targets — even to Sarajevo — are those coming from Belgrade, according to UN officials.

Thus, it seems not impossible in this conflict of never-ending contradictions and changing alliances that the winter fate of Bosnia's Croats and Mushins, former allies who have turned to fighting each other, will end up depending largely on those who used to be their common enemy, the Serbs.

UN officials agree that the make-or-break factor looming for the 275,000 remaining residents of Sarajevo is energy rather than food. There has not been a delivery of fuel to Sarajevo since Aug. 16; the flow of gas from Russia, via Hungary and Serbia, is too low for citywide heating, and the supply of electricity is continually cut by lighting. A. 1. 19

"The real crisis of this city is an energy crisis," said Tony Land, the chief commission representative. "It's the most important issue we". have to confront."

Sarajevo has a relatively dependable lifeline to the outside world.

HOTEL PASTIS: A Novel of Provence

DETER MAYLE made his name I with two antobiographical ac-counts of life in southern France, "A Year in Provence" and "Tou-jours Provence." Mayle's publication of a novel may appear to be a departure from these guides to good living in France, but it is in fact based solidly on the same old territory, and its (quite justifiable) aim appears to be revenge: Mayle intends to get back at his middle-class critics. So although "Hotel Pastis" provides a wide range of bad gays, from avan-cious advertising executives to petty crocks and even a professional Matioso, its archvillain is the vindictively named journalist Amactivety named journaust Am-brose Crouch, "a contentious, self-appointed guardian of the purity of peasant life ... a snob and a scrounger." Like other "long-es-tablished British expatriates ... patronizing, often arrogant, complaining about the prices and the iourists, conveniently forgetting that they had once been tourists themselves." Crouch can be relied upon to oppose any change in the Provencal village he now calls home. And change is what Mayle's story is all about.

The instigator of change (and thus Crouch's natural enemy) is Simon Shaw, an advertising tycoon. Burnt out by life in the fast lane and the messy details of his recent divorce from a vapid clotheshorse, Simon takes a break and drives his Porsche ("the most relaxed of his three cars") south through France. When his convertible hits bottom, Sumon is, happily enough, offered a lift by Nicole Bouvier, an impeccably dressed Parisienne, who apparently represents a step up from his

Bosnia Can Still Be Helped

The postmortems on Bosnia, the assigning and escaping of blame, are in full swing. But this is grotesque. Bosnia isn't dead yet. The crisis isn't over. A full range of the pains of war are still being inflicted in Bosnia, and a major flare-up or extension of the fighting in other parts of the former Yugoslavia is all too possible. The postmoriems represent not a quest for meaning and policy guidance but a flight from reality and responsibility. Denial, you could call it.

In Bosnia, for instance, attacks on relief convoys have caused the United Nations to suspend aid to a nullion utterly dependent civilians until the offending Croats and Muslims guarantee safe passage. This happens as a second winter of war settles upon a population without food and fuel, NATO had proudly prepared its first post-Cold War attack mission "out of area" to relieve the "strangulation" of Sarajevo, but Sarajevo is still being strangled and NATO is not out of area but out to lunch. You could read last week of appalling atrocities committed by Croats on Muslim villagers. Swedish peacekeepers got to Stupni Do soon enough to record exactly who bad done what to whom.

The great policy option regarding Bosnia was always whether to regard it in the way the post-World War II generation tegarded Berlin — as the place for the West to take a stand for high cause. But that question has been decid-ed: The answer is "no." The only residually decent alternative is to help the survivors limp into an uncertain next phase. Certain priorities follow. Relief comes first. The United Nations forces that went in to deliver it must do what is necessary to do the job. It goes without saying that relief goes first in the leading victims, the Muslims, whose own offenses will simply have to be sorted out later. Relief not only saves lives. It is something of a lever with which the West can try to persuade Serbs and Croats to stop the killing and to avoid escalation. Another lever is sanctions - keeping them on the Serbs, imposing them on the Croats. A determined march toward war crimes trials could also help. For the politics, another London conference is being talked up. But in the United States and Europe there is no evidence of the energy and the will to enforce required to make a new peace conference worthy of the name. Serbs and Croats are consolidating their land grabs. Bostua's Muslim government, as is its privilege, is toughening its line. The West does the parties no favor by mounting a new exercise in futility. Suppose they were left to their own devices. Could the result serve them less well than another round of vapid international diplomacy?

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

But the naming of Frankfurt also raises the

Taking the Frankfurt Risk

It had been pretty clear that Germany would get Europe's embryo central bank ever since the German finance minister said in August that if it did not "this whole enterprise will not happen." Last week's formal decision that Frankfurt will next year be the home of the European Monetary Institute nevertheless may turn out to be a political miscalculation. It is also, when you look at it, an excellent illustration of why it is still much too soon to believe in the idea of an all-European currency run by an all-European central bank.

Putting the EMI into Frankfurt points the spotlight at German power. The central, if unspoken, question about the European Community has always been whether the machinery of the Community would be a way for Europe's other countries to limit German power, or whether Germany could use the EC machinery to make itself the shaper of Europe's future. The unification of Germany -a bigger Germany - made the latter likelier. The widening of the Community to the north and the east will make it likelier still. The point is rammed home when Germany insists on having the Community's new monetary institution on its soil.

This is going to change other Europeans' calculations. It will make the French, and others, even more hesitant to move toward a mini monetary union with Germany if Britain is not in there with them to help balance German strength. It will make all the non-question of when - or whether - it will make sense for Europe to have one currency and one central bank. Where that bank is placed will help to decide the bank's policies: that is nhy Germany said it must be in Frankfurt. Suppose there were already a single European currency, run by a central bank based in Frankfurt. The Community-wide interest rate set by that bank might not have been quite as high as the Bundesbank's present rate (and German inflation would therefore have been rather worse and gone on rather longer). But it would certainly have been higher than the other Europeans' recession-blighted economies need. The governments of the other countries would have been denied the freedom to lower their own interest rates, as Britain has done and France should do. Their recessions would therefore have been worse, and their jobless lines longer, than they need have been. This clash of interests will go on being a fact of European life until a more or less uniform European economy comes into existence. Germany will one day overcome its unification crisis. But there will still be economic differences between the various parts of Europe, so long as one part lets its wages rise faster than another does, or saves less, and so on. So long as that is true, an interest rate that is right for one part will be wrong for another. The Community will need a single currency, and a bank to run it, when the economies of its

WASHINGTON — Sharp divisions among Bill Clinton's top advisers over his Haiti policy have sparked an informal reassessment of the administration's unconditional support for ousted President Jean-Bertrand Arisude. whose return to power appears increasingly doubtful. Internal battles over Hait and Somalia also have exposed flaws and fissures in the making of foreign policy under President Clinton. But the White House has rejected suggestions of a major overhaul. There will be only limited tinkering with

Mr. Clinin's foreign policy team. The divisions marring the administration's vaunted collegiality have no ideological overtones and lack the bitter personal rivalries of previous administratinas. They center on differing assessments of what will work. Mr. Clinton's advisers differ on means — particularly the use of U.S. differ on means — particularly, the use of U.S. troops for political purposes — not on goals. Haiti is an example. There is no backtracking on the president's commitment to restore democracy to the Carribbean state. But there is a spreading doubt that the junta will ever peacefully turn power over to Futher Aristide as it promised in the U.S.-brokered Governors Island accord. New internationally supervised elections, with Father Aristide and the junta stepping aside, may now be the only effective way to bring democratic rule to Haiti.

The CIA director, Jim Woolsey, and Defense Secretary Les Aspin predicted weeks ago that the junta would scuttle the Governors Island agreement, which called for Father Aristide to be re-stored to office by this past Saturday. Voicing doubt that the junta would protect the 200 lightly armed U.S. military trainers and engineers Washington had agreed to send, they strongly opposed dispatching the troops. The Woolsey-Aspin thesis was challenged by Secretary of State Warren Christopher, the U.S. envoy to the United Nations, Madeleine Albright, and the president's cerebral national security adviser. Anthony Lake. They argued that the United States had to carry out all the provisions of the Governors Island agreement, including landing the troops, to keep pressure on the junta to carry out its commitments and to preserve U.S. credibility.

The U.S. troops could be withdrawn quickly if trouble developed, they argued. Others protested that such a withdrawal would be a crippling humiliation for the world's only superpower.

In the end, the White House overrode the Pentagon's objections and ordered the troops sent to Haiti aboard the Harlan County, which was promptly recalled when mobs protested at dockside in Port-au-Prince.

In Haiti and Somalia, this administration has demonstrated an incapacity to synchronize military deployments and political timetables. The central fault line in the Clinton approach toward assured (Dereuse). This is fairly small stuff compared with the epic policy battles of the past. But in this presidency, which must cope with the post-Cold War world and a 43 percent electoral mandate, even small winkles create confusion inside and sharp criticism outside of Mr. Clinton's foreign affairs operation. The president has chaired just eight full National Security Council meetings since his inauguration, or about one a month. Those meetings are usually called after a crisis has developed or, in the words of an administration insider, "when the needle has pushed over into the red alert zone." They tend to focus on the public presentation of the administra-

K UALA LUMPUR - The rate of growth of Asia's population, which will in a few years exceed 3.5 billion or about 60 percent of the world total, will undoubtedly impose severe constraints on resources. Yet they do not warrant the kind of Mal-thusian angst that bred ill-conceived population policies in the past.

In recent years there has been a major shift in the attitude of international aid agencies on this issue. Some two decades ago, a high rate of population growth in a developing country was considered detrimental to progress. International aid organithey can stay converged; that is, when there is rations and donor countries imposed something that can honestly be called a single population control as a major condi-tion for economic aid, much as they now prescribe rules about human rights, democracy and preservation of the environment. The basic fallacy stemmed from the view that population growth would always outstrip the food production capacity of developing nations. That view has been debunked by the results of the so-called green revolution, which achieved a doubling of food output by bringing new high-yielding seeds and agricultural techniques to countries in Asia and elsewbere in the 1960s and '70s Instead of the old mind-set, we should look upon population as a principal resource. Development strategy must he directed primarily toward improving the quality of the human resource pool. Unfortunately, in many developing nations investment in human capital via basic education, training and health care bas not been given the priority it deserves. In the poorest parts of Asia, public expenditures on defense far exceed the amounts spent on education and health combined. That is very revealing.

radically from the development path taken by established industrial states in the West. There is a conspicuous absence of corrosive individualism.

Instead, the free enterprise of East Asia is largely communitarian in sub-stance, combining individual initiative and the pursuit of profit with societal goals and social responsibility. Western capitalism attempts to displace traditions, while East Asian countries iolegrate the positive values from the past within the dynamic framework of modern technology and commercial practice. For centuries, Asia was divided, some of its parts ruled separately by the competing political and economic powers of the West. After independence, we remained divided by ideolo-gy and political orientation. Now that the Cold War is behind us, it is time to come together in the pursuit of peace, prosperity and respectability. We must devise practical mechanism and institutions to accelerate regional economic collaboration and improve the quality of life of the Asian population in the 21st century and beyond. We must tear down all the artificial barriers that hinder the fullest realization of Asia's economic potential. However, that is not enough. We must. also advance a coherent social agenda that reflects and reinforces the region's unique values and traditions. Preserving and strengthening the family unit as the basic institution of society should be the foremost aim. According to a Chinese proverb. if the family lives in harmony, all affairs will prosper. We must ensure that as we industrialize, the fabrie of the family does not break down, with the attendant social problems. Asian society, now robust and dynamic, will remain harmonious as long as it continues to maintain a just balance between the demand for rights and the fulfilling of responsibilities. Each member of the community owes something to all the rest, and the community owes something to each of its members. This idea of reciprocity must be at the heart of our understanding of social justice. The erosion of the sense of commu nity in the West has been largely due to the ceaseless minting of rights, while passing the buck when it comes to responsibilities. Yet much of the injust tice encountered in Asia is attributable to the denial of the rights of the individual, so much so that the individual virtually disappears in faceless collec-tivity. Surely the truth is somewhere in between. Asia should follow the middie path and the golden mean. International Herald Tribune.

B OSTON — A pathetic by-pro-duct of the genocide in Bosnia has been the attempt by some Ameri-cans of Serbian ancessity to deny the reality of the Serbian aggression there. "What's happening in Bosnia," Bob Djurdjevic of Phoenix wrote to The New York Times the other day.

"is not a 'genocide.' ... It is a trage-dy largely inflicted on the Muslims by their own government."

Sure — in the sense that the gov-erament of Bosaia, an internationally recognized country, refused to coop-erate in its dismemberment. It had the temerity to resist Serbian "ethnic cleansing" of its Muslim citizens. The phrase "ethnic cleansing" was actually invented by the Serbs for their operations in Bosnie. And everyone knows what it has meant: the murder of 150,000 Muslims and the expulsion of more than a million from their towns and villages.

There is no secret about any of this, except to the willfully blind. The United States, the European Community and numerous buman rights groups have documented the horrors. Serbian soldiers themselves have described the systematic rape of Muslim women."

It is not surprising that Americans with attachments to a country of origin should resist seeing that it has been taken over by a tyranny. But sooner or later a decent person's sight clears.

Happily, there are Serbian-Americans who see and speak ont. George Mitrovich, writing in the Los Angeles Times, deplored "the abject failure of Serbian-Americans to grasp the bru-tal savagery of that evil conflict and to protest Serbia's guilt."

The poet Charles Simic wrote in The New Republic: "The destruction of Vukovar and Sarajevo will not be forgiven the Serbs. Whatever moral credit they had as a result of their history they squandered by these two acts."

And the destruction goes on. On Oct. 9, Radovan Karadzic, leader of the Bosnian Serbs, said, "The siege of Sarajevo is over." When the Serbs poured shells on the city a week later, that was explained as a reply to an attack by Bosnian government forces. But in fact Serbian shelling and sniping have gone on before and since — as has the Serbian blockade of Sarajevo.

Fred Cony, a disaster relief spe-cialist, has been in Sarajevo for the International Rescue Committee for the last 10 months. Back in the United States on a brief leave, he told me that the siege is worse now than at any time since the spring. The Serbs are blocking oil, sup-

Canada Can Afford NAFTA

Supporters of the North American Free Trade Agreement hoped that the Liberal Party, once it won the Canadian elections, would drop its vow to renegotiate the trade pact. But last week Jean Chretien. the prime ministerelect, resurrected the threat. That is unfortunate, because renegotiation could bury NAF-TA --- an important pact that would raise living standards in Canada, Mexico and the United States and lock Mexico into its promarket reforms. The threat is also trunecessary. because NAFTA does not bear on the trade issues that disturb Mr. Chretien the most.

The dispute is mostly about subsidies that the Canadian government gives industries like wheat and lumber. These subsidies are designed to solve domestic problems, like bailing out flagging industries and developing downtrodden regions. But the two countries economies are so intertwined that domestic subsidies inevitably affect trade between them. Subsidies help Canadian producers lower their prices, giving exporters an "unfair advantage." according to their U.S. competitors.

Unc.r existing trade rules, the United States, after finding that subsidies have materially injured domestic producers, can impose offsetting taxes, known as countervailing duties, on the offending imports, Canada has challenged U.S. actions and has often persuaded a dispute panel to throw out the countervailing duties. But Mr. Chretien wants more protection, perhaps some kind of immunity from retaliation.

It is a difficult dispute to resolve, because both countries have behaved responsibly yet each feels wounded. Fortunately, there may be a way out. The draft accord from the Uruguay Round of international trade talks would permit countries to provide general subsidies to industries located in poor regions without fear of retaliation. The United States has already embraced this provision. The two countries should be able to adopt a similar Canadian pressure could hand American consumers a big victory. U.S. administrations. bowing to industry, have olten brought charges of unfair trade practices where none exist. If Canada compels the United States to retaliate only when justified, then more foreign goods will enter the United States, driving down prices. For consumers, that is like having Washington deposit a big check in their bank accounts.

NAFTA does not address the unfair trade issues that Mr. Chretien wants resolved. And the accord should not be derailed by such ancillary disputes. The solution to the subsidies dispute is hard negotiations. NAFTA does not preclude such negotiations and should not be held hostage to their resolution. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

In many parts of Asia, political instability imposes severe limitations to any form of development. At the same time, corruption, abuse of power and lack of accountability often serve to divert resources, whether domestic wealth or foreign aid. to the pockets of irresponsible elite groups. A stable political framework is essential for development. However, repressive authoritarian measures are not the only path to stability. Nor are they the most effective.

Asian countries cannot compromise on the basic goal of development: to liberate the masses from poverty and ignorance. But physical various forms of repressive authoritarianism which blatantly deny the basic rights of citizens. On the other, there are those which have embraced Western liberal democracy uncritically and to the point of paralyzing the process of government itself. While Asians should be committed to the ideals of democracy, its practices must relate to the realities and conditions of their respective societies. It is unfortunate that most Asian nations gained independence in the 1940s and '50s when the ideas of socialism were at the height of respectability. Most countries embarked on dirigistic economic policies, preferring to protect their industrial producers rather than provide cheaper goods for the general population via free trade. Even in states that embarked on serious development, the empha-sis was not on developing human capital but on industrialization programs which siphoned off scarce resources to ostentatious projects requiring massive protection

First the IRA Has to Cease Violence

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON - The reach for reconciliation in heretofore improbable places like South Africa and the Middle East has prompted a search for breakthrough possibilities elsewhere. It is a worthy inquiry that ought to be conducted widely, but, as the example of Northern freland shows, it has to be conducted wisely, too.

Talk with the IRA, says, among others, former British Prime Minister Edward Heath, who 20 years ago inconclusively did. If Israel can sit down with the Palestine Liberation Organization and South Africa with the African National Congress, then the British can sit down with their own terrorist nemesis, the Irish Republican Army. Or so this disarmingly plausible fine goes. Whoa. The PLO had formally abandoned terrorism when it got to sit down with the Israelis, who needed some years to register this traumatic development in their poli-tics and policy. The ANC was moving the same way to accept coexis-tence as an end and dialogue as a means in dealing with the ruling white South Africans. This readiness to abandon "armed struggle" for political maneuver and democratic practice is the crucial element still missing from the policy of the IRA. The IRA appears to remain dedi-cated to forcibly ousting the British from their sovereign territory in Northern Ireland. Its purpose goes qualitatively beyond any attempt to serve the reasonable, urgent and so far unmet goals of fair treatment, equal protection and more local auinnomy for the Catholic minority. But Brits-ont would almost certainly precipitate open and escalating war between Catholics and the Protestant majority. This could easily dwarf the paramilitary terrorism. Protestant as well as Catholic. that has taken more than 3,000 lives in Northern Ireland since 1969. It is morally unthinkable. As a practical matter. Brits-out is also politically unthinkable. The Financial Times' Joe Rogaly observes that despite the fearsome death toll and a parallel money cost topping $20 billion, the Britisb electorate still stands firmly behind maintaining the British presence in Northern Ireland. Imperial arrogance, some might say. A demo-cratic people's refusal to bow to a minority's violence explains it bet-wing. Sinn Fein, out of the terrorist cold. But the terrorism issue remains a hard nut. Just on Wedness day. Mr. Adams served as a pall-bearer for an IRA guerrilla hlown up in the act of killing 10 Belfast Protestants. Conor Cruise O'Brien, columnist for the largest Irish daily, faults Mr. Hume himself for not going beyond denunciation of violence to urge Catholics to cooperate with the security forces.

In April, Mr. Hume and Mr. Adams embraced "national self-determination" for all Ireland - a formula that Mr. O'Brien criticizes as denving legiumacy to Northern Ire-land. In September, Mr. Hume and

Mr. Adams announced agreement on what is still secret but is described as a peace procedure. It is uncertain what the Hume-

Adams connection can contribute to the continuing "talks on the fu-ture of Northern Ireland" between the British and Irish governments and the constitutional parties in Northern Ireland. Mr. O'Brien lo-cates the bottleneck in those talks in the Irish Republic's refusal so far, under John Hume's pressure, to back off from consultational claims to "reintegrate" Northern Ireland, which are anathema to Protestants living there. To be optimistic about bargaining is in an early phase. Some would use the existing deadlock as an interlude in which to exploit the deep popular revulsion against terrorism on both sides. That against terrorism on bour source and Protestants are now doing more killing than Catholics could remove the inhibiting and-Catholic labe from such a campaign. Give police the internment-without-trial powers that they will need to put both sets of terrorist leaders out of business, Mr. O'Brien and others say, and politics could have a chance. Many people take the nihilistic view that the hatreds in Ireland are - Bosnia north. Many people used to say the same about South Africa and the Middle East. Those cases, while not guiding, are relevant. First stop the terrorism. Then tackle the grievances. You can't bring in the IRA before it has followed the example of the PLO and the ANC and clearly (no word games, no backsliding) set out on the political path. Then, like the Afrikaners and the Israelis, the IRA's British antagonists must respond. The Washington Post.

plies of winter clothing, plastic for weatherproofing houses," Mr. Cuny said - "all kinds of bumanitarian supplies. The critical things now are water and natural gas. George Soros [the American philanthropist] funded an emergency water system, taking water from two river sites. But the Serbs are shelling the sites now.

"If the water system is stopped, during the winter people will have to stand in line to get water and carry it home in buckets in the freezing cold through super fire. And the scwage system will break down."

Natural gas comes through a pipe line from Hungary. At the Bosnian border most of the gas goes to Belgrade; just 10 percent is supposed to go to Sarajevo. The United Nations sanctions committee allowed the gas to go to Belgrade on condition that the Serbs not interrupt the supply to Sarajevo, but they have stopped it. And gas is the only constant source of fuel for the winter. The gas situation, at least, has a simple solution. The UN sanctions committee should immediately cut off the supply to Belgrade, and keep it off, unless and until the Serbs let the gas flow to Sarajevo. Croatian forces in Bosnia have now added their names to the geno-cide list, by butchering Muslim men, women and children in the village of Stupni Do. The UN officer who arrived on the scene, Brigadier Angus Ramsay of Britain, said. "This is a disgusting war crime." President Franjo Tudjman of Croatia is overdue to be called to account.

But it was Serbian leaders who launched the armed aggression -President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia, Mr. Karadzic and his military chief, Ratko Mladic. If there is any justice, they will be tried for war crimes. As Brigadier Ramsay said of the massacre at Suppri Do: "One day this war will be over, and those who have done this thing will answer for it, if we get this thing right."

Finally, he went on the defensive, trying to explain the Clinton vision of foreign policy and the lessons learned from the searing experiences of the last month in Somalia and Haiti. # Washington Is Favoring Pakistan, India Asserts

NEW DELHI -- India has accused the United States of abandoning its evenhanded policy on South Asia to favor Pakistan in the dispute over Kashmir, according to officials here. They said that Kenneth Brill, the U.S. charge d'affaires, had been summoned to the Foreign Ministry on Friday to explain remarks by a senior official in Washington that appeared to question Kashmir's accession to India.

He said there was no change in U.S. policy on the issue, but was told India regarded the remarks as a tilt toward Pakistan," an Indian official said.

External Affairs Minister Dinesh Singh led the criticism of the remarks, which Indian news agencies attributed to the U.S. assistant secretary of state for South Asian Affairs, Robin

Lynn Raphael, a diplomat at the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi until four months ago.

"Kashmir is, was and shall always remain an integral part of India." Mr. Singh said in a tatement. "We will not brook any outside interference from any quarter."

The Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party said: "This stand of the American govern-ment will not improve India-Pakistan relations and it can only affect Indo-American relations."

The last time that New Delhi accused Washington of favoring Pakistan was before the last of the three Indian-Pakistani wars, which led to Bangladeshi independence in 1971. Only re-cently have Indian-U.S. relations begun to India was most alarmed about the reported remark attributed to Ms. Raphael, who had apparently spoken to journalists on condition anonymity.

"We view Kashmir as a disputed territory and that means that we do not recognize that Instrument of Accession as meaning that Kashmir is forever more an integral part of India." she was quoted as saying.

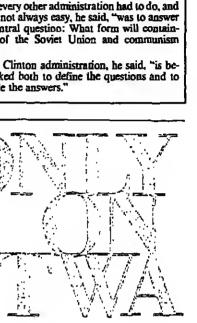

Officials said that despite a State Department statement that the United States respected the territorial integrity of India, the official's remark on the treaty of accession questioned Indian unity.

Halloween Unearths Both Fears and Risks

Throughout the United States over the Halloween weekend. thousands of parents stood by to poke, prod, unwrap and squeeze chocolates, caramel kisses, gumdrops and other pieces of candy in the yearly hunt for pins, razor blades, glass and poison. Few if any were likely to find any problems. At the same time, hospital emergency rooms braced for their own

Halloween phenomena - scrapes, twists, broken limbs and more serious injuries, that occur when children scamper in the gloom across streets in ill-fitting, dark costumes. Or as The Washington Post reflected with some rony, "Inspect the candy, yet let the child run into the street."

More than 3,000 children are killed each year crossing the streets, many on Hallowen. And as real risks go, "Hallowen sadism" ranks low, said Joel Best, a sociology professor at Southern Illinois Univer-sity at Carbondale. He has researched 78 reported incidents of treal-tampering since 1958. Most incidents are exposed as hoaves usually rigged by youngsters, or, in a few tragic cases, assaults by family members, such as the Texas father who poisoned his son's candy with cyanide in 1974.

Mr. Best said that in 25 years he had found no documented fatality from poisoned Halloween candy, and even reports of injuries were virtually impossible to verify.

As Trade Talks Heat Up, Bonds Are Nearing a Boil

By Carl Gewirtz onal Herald Tribune

ARIS - Bond markets suffered from volatility last week and more may be coming as investors begin to lock in their profits and head for the sidelines. While last week's worries were centered on Wall Street and triggered by the prospect that faster U.S. growth means the end of the decline in interest rates, the approaching threat, to all financial markets, is the coming deadline on trade negotiations. The proposal to create a North American free trade area is.

expected to go to Congress later this month. Four weeks later, the clock runs out on the Uruguay Round negotiations to liberalize, world trade being held under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The outcome of both is uncertain and analysts warn that the possibility of failure is not yet factored into asset prices, meaning that a failure to reach agree- A failure of GATT or ment could raitle the markets. Although the two sets of talks NAFTA will increase

North American Free Trade

Agreement dooms the prospect for the Unuguay Round. At the very least, says John Lipsky at Salomon Brothers in New York, failure of the talks will increase the level of risk; and that should translate into a decline in the price of long-term assets and overall higher volatility in prices.

By raising the prospect of increased protectionism, the failure of the talks would both damage the outlook for world export-led growth and increase the danger of inflation, he says. "Inflation expectations likely would rise most in those countries that depend on import competition to counter domestic price pressures, or where protectionist tendencies are expected to be most prominent," he says.

Mr. Lipsky adds that the currencies of those nations are most likely also to suffer.

He expects that the yen will be exposed if increased protectionism blocks Japanese exports and considers the dollar a likely beneficiary if the U.S. trade deficit contracts.

Meanwhile, in the international capital market, attention remains focused on floating rate notes — instruments that provide maximum protection against an increase in interest rates. Sweden raised $1 billion through a global offering, the first in the floating-rate-note sector. Interest on the three-year notes is to be set at %-point, or 12.5 basis points, below the three-month interbank rate.

But as the notes were offered at a slight discount, investors will be paid 9 basis points below the interbank rate. Lead manager J. P. Morgan estimated that more than a third of the paper was sold in Asia and a quarter in the Middle East.

Coromerzbank tapped the market twice. One issue was of $150 million of 12-year subordinated collared debt promising a minimum interest rate of 5 percent and a maximum of 8 percent; the: coupon is set at 30 basis points over the six-month interbank rate.

The German bank also sold $750 million of senior five-year paper paying one basis point over the three-month interbank rate.

Central Bankers Are Going House-Hunting

European central bank governors and Alexandre Lamfalussy, their designated leader, will soon gather in Frankfurt to do some Christmas shopping - for a good home for the future European central bank and its predecessor, the European Monetary Institute.

Frankfurt Notebook

Their tour guide in town will be Hans Tietmeyer, president of the Bundesbank, which the European institution will eventually replace. "They will look at different huildings and then decide." Mr. Tietmeyer said generously Sunday in a German radio interview. He promised the Bundesbank would not overshadow the EML Will 500,000 square meters (4.6 million

Confidence in Bank Analysis

Outside Germany, market analysis at German banks are frequently regarded with suspicion on the belief that lack of tough competition and insider trading regulations cry out for abuse.

Not all banks are had, however, accord-ing to a report by Global Investor. A survey of 160 institutional investors found overwhelming confidence in the recommendations of Deutsche Bank AG, Germany's biggest commercial hank, and its DB Research subsidiary. Other strong performers were Sal. Oppenheim and Schröder Münchmeyer Hengst, two pri-vate banks, and Commerzbank AG, the country's third-largest commercial bank. Dresdner Bank AG, Germany's num-ber-two commercial bank, received particularly poor marks.

Why All Those White Socks

One question asked by foreign visitors to Frankfurt is why so many young, male hankers insist on flouting conventional lashion standards by wearing white socks with dark suits.

"While goes with everything," ventured one banker. Siegfried Gutermann, a spokesman for Deutsche Bank AG and a dark-socks man, offered another explanation. "A lot of young bankers are bachelors. you know, and I've heard that white socks are easier to keep clean."

CREATING A NETWORK FOR GROWTH IN THE REGION

seven months of this year.

Singapore is at a turning point. Over the last 30 years, it has built itself into one of the world's busiest trade centers, as well as a hub for information and telecommunications technology.

name, Singapore Ltd. With the government's recent push for local companies to expand their business overseas, however, the epithet has suddenly changed to Singapore Unlimited.

An external focus is crucial for Singapore's future growth, primarily because of its limited home base. As Singapore trades up to become part of the leading edge of high-tech production and a multinational headquarters base, other locations must be found for processes and procedures further down the manufacturing and service ladder.

Traditionally, Singapore has pumped most of its overseas investment into neighboring countries like Malaysia, Indonesia and Thailand. While investment in these countries remains strong, there is a new, significant flow to countries like Vietnam and China.

In 1992, local companies allotted $1 billion to China, making Singapore the sixth-largest investor after countries like Hong Kong. Macao, Taiwan and the United States. Interest in China has escalated even further over the past year. especially in Suzhou, a city this year - continue, and if some of the huge investments still in the curds come to fruition. One of the largest of Singapore's prospects in Vietnam is the $500 million pledged by Koh Brothers to upgrade infrastructure on Phu Quoc reaching $268 million. Invesiment in the country is not likely to slow down over the remainder of the year, as there are several large projects in the works. Highsonic Enterprises, a Singapore-based consortium, has reportedly signed a $10-million joint-venture deal with the government to set up a new international airtine called Myanmar Airways International. As a result, the existing state-run airline, Myanmar Airways, will be limited to domestic routes in future.

Singapore's external aspirations seem to have captured the imagination of many toreign governments, which are approaching Singapore with investment ideas. For example, the Mauritian government has made it clear that it is looking for Singaporeans to enter joint ventures with its private sector in high-tech industries. The Mauritians are luring investors with their preferential access to the European Community. Cambodian leaders are also calling on Singapore for infrastructure help.

They have asked Singaporeans to draft blueprints for a new airport and to upgrade the Sihanoukville port, as well as to participate in the rehuilding of the telephone network.

Meanwhile, other countries are approaching Singapore for collaborative efforts to invest in thirdparty countries. For example. High-end investment is still pouring into Singapore. Dutch clectronics giant Philips recently set up its sixth factory on the island. Sony Display Device has announced an investment in its color television plant of 45 million Singapore dollars ($28 million), bringing total investment to $360 million Singapore dollars. Sony Precision Engineering already has seven factories and 30,000 square meters of research and development space.

munications technology park was recently announced. The park will encourage research and development in telecommunications and information technology in the republic.

To ensure that the human resource pool is hig enough to handle these investments, the board initiated an overseas recruitment drive in 1991 to woo talented professionals to Singanore.

Until recently, this drive was focused on North America, Europe and Australia. There has now been a shift to nontraditional sources like China, India and the former Soviet Union. On a recent mission to India. the Singapore headhanters interviewed 500 engineers, computer personnel and technicians out of over 2,000 applications Chok Tong said in his recent National Day received. Because of the overwhelming response. Telecom also decided to offer more shares than originally planned.

The Telecom issue will not be the end of the road for privatization. The government aims to ensure that Singaporeans have a personal stake in the well-being of key companies and eash in on the country's burgeoning wealth. It is atmost certain that statutory boards like Singapore Broadcasting Corporation, the Public Utilities Board and the Civil Aviation Authority of Singapore will be privatized in

Luring Investors for the Rebuilding of Beirut

BEIRUT - A $1.8 billion company is to uotil Jan. 10. be launched this week to rebuild central Beirut in what is called one of the largest urban redevelopment projects of the 1990s. The company hopes to rebuild a wide area of the capital's center that was devastated in Lebanon's civil war. In the place of shell-torn buildings, it is planning a financial and office complex, botels, seaside parks and tree-lined walkways. A 25-year time frame is expected. The project covers 1.6 million square meters, or 160 hectares (400 acres) of land, and calls for 4.4 million square meters of floor space, depending on market conditions.

SYDNEY - Diego Maradona conjured up one piece of artistry Sunday night as Argentina played to a -1 draw with Australia in the first-leg match of their World Cup qualifier.

Maradona, 33, in his comeback to international soccer, created the opening goal for striker Abel Balbo in the 37th minute. Midfielder Aurelio Vidmar equalized for Australia in the 42d minute.

The second-leg match is to be played Nov. 17 in. Buenos Aires, with the winner on aggregate advanting to the 1994 World Cup finals in the United States.

Australia's captain, Paul Wade, marked Maradona effectively and for much of the match he played at a walking pace. But when he did strike, he robbed Austral an sweeper Milan Ivanovic of the ball. whipped a pinpoint left-footed cross from the right, wing, and Balbo soared high to head the ball past the diving Australian goalkeeper Mark Bosnich.

It was Argentina's first shot on goal, the speedy Australians having dominated the match for the first 30 minutes."

"I thought he played well after such a long break." Argentina's coach, Alffio Basile, said of Maradona. "He was clever to create the goal."

Basile said that "when we scored I thought the game was ours, but their goal so soon to equalize really took us by surprise."

A chip pass from German-based midfielder Ned Zelic got fullback Tony Vidmar free on the right: Vidmar booked the ball across the penalty area for his brother, Aurelio, to side oot it into the net with Argentine goalkeeper Sergio Goycochea stranded.

Morrison Loses Title, and Payday

By Gerald Eskenazi New York Times Service PHOENIX, Arizona - Fighters come. Fighters fall. Fighters go. So their promoters make deals with the survivors. Thus, after a suitable mourning period for Tommy Morrison's dethrooement — a night's sleep — Bob Arum was working the phones Saturday morning, talking to Dan Duva and trying to line up a heavy-weight championship fight for Michael Bentt.

Many people were scrambling, if not incredulous, in the wake of Friday night's stunning development in Tuisa. Oklahoma, that, once again, has changed the heavyweight picture: the once-forgotten Bentt's first-round knockout of Morrison. With the victory, Bentt. who was raised in New York City, won the lightly regarded World

Boxing Organization title. Morrison (promoted by Arum) already had signed to meet Lennox Lewis (promoted by Dava) in March for Lewis's World Boxing Council crown. Morrison was 10 receive $7.25 million, but only if he didn't lose any fights in between, That fight is now off.

"This ranks as oce of the stupi-dest managerial decisions in boxing history." Duva said of Morrison's decision to meet Bentt.

Morrison did earn $1.5 millioo for the bout. But still, why risk that second payday worth almost $6 million more?

Marrison said after the loss -he was knocked down three times. causing a mandatory stoppage af-ter only 93 seconds — that he would not second-guess himself.

Instead, trying to follow up a nerable to a straight right. That was the beginning of the end of his reign.

He is only 34 years old, though, and says he can come back. He has done it before. Two years ago he was knocked out by Ray Mercer in a failed attempt for Mercer's WBO title. But last Juce. Morrison punctuated his comeback with a decision over 40-plus George Foreman to take the vacant crown. Morrison is now 38-2. His defeat

Bentt. disillusioned aod ashamed, and with maoagerial problems, took off 22 months, working at a hospital in New York. He returned to fighting and has now won 11 straight hours after his losiog debut.

Michael Carbajal retained his IBF and WBC tight-flyweight titles in Phoenix by stopping Domingo Sosa in the fifth round, and Oscar De La Hoya knocked out Narciso Valenzuela of Mexico in the first round, The Associated Press re-Carbajal (30-0) won by knockout for the fifth straight time and 18th overall. It was the Sosa's second loss in 30 fights, both while seeking world titles.

Sosa had won four straight bouts since losing a 12-round decision to former WBC champioo Humberto Gonzalez, who lost his piece of boxing's three-way championship pie to Carbajal on March 13. Sosa withered before Carbajal, who threw 225 power punches and landed 164.

Shaquille O'Neal's Act Still Lacks a Closing Scene

By Ian Thomsen International Herald Tribune LONDON --- "To me, acting is all facial expressions and delivery," said Shaquille

O'Neal. Someday, after all of the things he never would have predicted have happened to him, he might recall saying this and have a good laugh over it. He was 21 and lying across a pair of hotel beds shoved together when he said it on Saturday. The talk was about his movie. Then room service arrived with two club sandwiches of six loyers each cut into quarters, plus french fries, and four tomic waters.

"Alex," Shaquille said, sitting up, "that's not what I wanted." Alex told the waiter, "We wanted Sprites." Alex Martins is director of publicity for the Orlando Magic, who will pay O'Neal $4 million this year. If you forced all of Shaquille's annual income inside four cans of Sprite, then $4 million is a swallow for him. That's one swallow for him. This weekend, when he was bringing the Na-tional Basketball Association to England in compensation for what the Beatles brought to America, or so you might have thought. Alex Martins handled everything.

Within five minutes, the waiter was coming back with four cans of 7-Up. "I'd like to be a karate champion," O'Neal said.

PARIS — Sheryl Swoopes, acclaimed last year's top U.S. women's college bas-ketball player as Texas Tech won the NCAA championship, has quit her club team in Bari, Italy, and returned to the At 7 feet, 1 inch and 301 pounds, with a black belt tied around his agility and strength, he would become the world's most dangerous human being. This is no hype. It is very, very scary. He watches kickboxing whenever he can find it on the United States, ber agent said. The team freed Swoopes to sign with another European club, but her agent.

satellite dish in his house overlooking the third hole of a golf course in suburban Orlando, Florida, His neighbors include Arnold Palmer and John Daly. O'Neal hates golf. But we were talking about karate. "I just started," be said about karate. "I practice when I can. A guy came to see me when I was in L.A. When I left, he gave me some instructions."

How does this happen? He is talking about being surrounded in a biker's bar by a dozen black-leather lelons and taking them out in twos and threes with flying kicks and backhands -he didn't say that, it was the image that was given while he was talking about karate - but all I really wanted to know was whether he's learned to shoot a free throw. Well, has he? Has he developed a finesse shot to offset his undemark dunks? Is he going to live up to all of the income his potential is generating?

It always seems to happen, that the most intriguing topics generate the least inter-esting discussion. Most of the time you're trying to convince someone famous to talk his game. Nothing. It's a revelation, how genuinely bored he seems by it. "We're going to be O.K.," he says of the Magic, the most intriguing of all the darkhorses to seize the vacuum created by Michael Jordan's reurement. Unlike those e's replacing - Julius Erving (his teen idol), Magic Johnson, Larry Bird and Michael Jordan - O'Neal offers no insight to a game flooded with physical nuance, psychology and geometry. This is not to say he is dumh. He isn't, and he is pleasant and affable. But he is strikingly not fascinated by the possibilities. Bill Wahon loved to create, and that was the stuff of jazz. O'Neal wants to dunk which, while it can make you a star internationally in a short time, is the creative sister to beating a bass drum.

Of course he should dunk whenever he can. Jordan was born from that strategy, but each summer he - like Bird. like Magic - added something until the greatest of all dunkers was leading the league in about a mysterious tragedy in his past or steals, setting records for 3-pointers and

He averaged 23 points, 14 rebounds and more than three blocks a game last season, but made only 59 percent of his free throws, and that dispelled him as the player to take the last shot. By his own admission, he has never made a shot to win a game in the last second. Never.

'I really have seen a different person this year than in his rookie season." said the coach of the Magic, Brian Hill. "I've seen him every day trying to lead by example with his work effort. He works as hard on the floor as any player l've ever been associated with. The question, over a period years, is whether he commits so much to his endorsement activities in the summertime that it's going to have an effect in not allowing his body to recuperate from the NBA season. But right now be's 21, and like anyone at 21 he feels invincible."

This is because his notoriety has produced television ads which will be replaced by next year, three recent books destined for the bargain bin within 18 months and a movie — "Blue Chips," in which he is a player recruited by Nick Note - which has yet to come out but will be available on video amid all of the thousands of others for $2 rental before be knows it.

By Christine Brennan B'ashington Post Service NEW YORK - China, receasily turned down by the International Olympic Committee in its bid to host the 2000 Olympic Games, might decide not to seek the 2004 Games if an African nation announces it wants to host those Olympics, the IOC's president, Juan Antonio Samaranch, has Samaranch said three South African cities have expressed interest in the Olympics: Johannesburg, Capetown and Durban. to also is interested, he said. Any nation that is an IOC member can propose a candidate city to the IOC: South Africa would have to choose one city before presenting it to the 10C

A decision on the site of the 2004 Olympics will be made in 1997.

If a South Alrican city emerges as a strong candidate for the 2004 Olympics, it will mark the second consecutive Summer Olympic site selection process that could potentially be shrouded in controversy. Last month, the IOC chose Sydney as host of the 2000 Games, with Beijing losing out in a close vote. The selection ended several months of political debate on the issue of human rights violations in China, including U.S. congressional resolutions and letters denouncing the Beijing bid. South Africa, meanwhile, was readmitted to the Olympic movement in 1991 after two decades of isolation because of its policy of apartheid.

Samaranch said he would meet with the Chinese Otympic Committee's president, He Zhenliang, in December to discuss China's intentions for the 2004 Games. After Sydney won the 2000 Games, some Olympic insiders speculated that China would be given the 2004 Olympics, by which time its facilities and infrastructure would be ready and the issue of its human rights violations might be resolved. Samaranch said he had "nothing against" taking the Summer Games to the Pacific rim twice in a row, but he indicated, for the first time, that opening Africa to the Olympic Games might be a higher priority, pending election results in South Africa next year.

2 U.S. Lugers Attacked in Germany

NEW YORK - Two members of the U.S. luge team were involved in a fight with a gang of skinheads in eastern Germany in what was presumed to be a racial incident. an official with the U.S. luge federation reported.

The assault, in Oberhof, Germany, was later confirmed by German police.

Five members of the U.S. luge team were in an Oberhof disco when 15 skinheads entered and made a threatening move toward Pipkins.

To create a distraction and allow his leammates to escape, Kennedy pushed one of the skinheads. Pipkins was roughed up, but he and his teammates managed to leave the bar the first scheduled for Monday in Königs through a side entrance, while Kennedy was trapped inside.

"Duncan got beat up," Hughes said. "There were no broken hones. No concussions. He was just roughed up." Kennedy may be able to resume training as early as Sunday. Hughes said.

Tania Hunter, left, and Veronica Manussis, acutely attuned to changing tastes, with several of their necklaces. Their show, "Forever Amber," opens Nov. 11.

'Molten Sunshine': Amber's New Day in the Sun

By Suzy Menkes International Herald Televie

ONDON - Long before "Jurassic Park" was a mos-L ONDON — Long before "Jurassic Park" was a mos-quito hump on Sieven Spielberg's brain, two London women were on the amber trail, But this was not a search for the globular resinous gunk encasing a perified of million-year-old insect from whose blood dinosaurs could be recreated.

The amber that spills over the counter of their London jewelry bounque means chunky necklaces the color of runny honey or big barbane bracelets as translucent as harley sugar

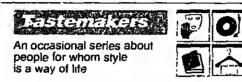

Tania Hunter and Veronica Manussis have a way of catching fashion's fleeting moments and presenting them as objects of design. From their Cobra and Bellamy store they have become tastemakers of the essential accessory, a litmus test of changing moods and modes.

In the 1980s, they were known for making fashion jewelry into collectibles, giving names like Trifan the resonance once attached only to "real" jewelers. Their exhibitions --always just ahead of their time - have spelled out changing tastes: "Forms of the 1950s," when that decade was still despised: "Stoned," anticipating the revival of the 1960s futurism of Courreges and Paco Rabanne. "The Grand Illusion" in the mid-1980s, an early celebration of glass paste and glitz.

"Forever Amber," the exhibition that opens Nov. 11. shows that the fabulous fakes of the 1980s have lost their sparkle. The focus for the 1990s is on the real values of semiprecious stones and the ethnic styles that go to the tribal bear of current fashion

"The mood of the moment is not for wearing a big flashy than using small pieces of amber set in silver. Hunter, who diamond brooch," says Hunter. "This is amber as you have takes a scholarly interest in stones, enthuses too over never seen it before, big pieces that you have to keep touching, the natural material showing its different colors and textures. Amber seems to be with the mood of fashion and for people who want to invest in something that is not rubbish

Manussis talks of the romance of amber, of witnessing on the edge of the Baltic Sea a crowd scavenging for the yellow treasure thrown up from the deep. She conveys her passionate enthusiasm and her feeling for design with the skill of a former actress. She came to jewelry through dealing in Art Deco furniture and objects in the shop she opened in King's Road in London in the hipple era. In 1980, she joined forces with Hunter, a trained nallet dancer, who was selling Art Nouveau jewelry from an antiques stall,

Together they have created a shop that sells their own designs -- semiprecious stones set in silver -- the work of jewelers who interest them, especially the silversmith Barbara Bertagnolli, and now amber as a specialty,

Hunter and Manussis spent last week in Poland, tracking down the "erows" who smuggle across the border from Russia baskets filled with huge lumps of the fossilized resin. which Cobra and Bellamy leave in their natural state, rather takes a scholarly interest in stones, enthuses too over antique amber, darkened with age; delicately faceted co-gnac-colored beads from the Dominican Republic; the rarest "blue" amber, and even barbaric stones that are traditionally rejected for jewelry and used to make varnish. Manussis strokes a necklace of flat, pale-yellow pieces that she designed in geometric Art Deco style, and another, contrasting string of rugged lumps.

"I like the primitive necklaces, simple organic shapes that have the amber to live on its own." she says, "And the white amber that looks as if it is ivory."

Like ivory and coral, both now considered ecologically endangered, the lure of amber is that it is a fruit of nature. Real amber, as opposed to the many fakes, is the fossilized sup of prehistoric trees. Its use as jewelry goes back at least as far as Homer's "The Odyssey," when he described Penelope receiving "beads of amber like molten sunshine." Jewelry as much as clothing reflects social change: from the sentimental Victorian Innkets and paraphernalia of mourning, through the lacy jewels of dainty Edwardian ladies to the flamboyant and sophisucated 1930's "cocktail" style. You can read into the 1990s vogue for nature's stones a reflection of the wider world: a focus on ecology and environmental issues, and a desire to go back to nature, rather than forward with technology. Manussis and Hunter have instinctively focused on amber to express changing

"The mood is for more natural things and for not such a mercenary attitude," says Hunter, "But Veronica and 1 don't suddenly think: Let's do old costume jewelry, or let's do amber. It kind of happens."

Getting on the Side of the Angels

LANGUAGE

By William Safire WASHINGTON - "Perot is a good fellow," Lee lacocca said about Ross Perol (the former H. Ross Perol) in preparing to challenge the billionaire's anti-NAFTA campaign, "... but he's on the wrong side of the angels here." Newsweek said the former Chrysler boss was "gearing up for his role" as administration anti-protect spokesman. Gearing up was a suitable figure of speech to describe the action of an automobile executive.

There is no "wrong" side of the angels. There is the side of the angels, and the side of the apes. This phrase was coined in England in 1864, at the beight of the confroversy about Charles Darwin's theory of

At the Oxford Diocesan Conference, Benjamin Disraeli, who had been a leader of the Tory protectionists. and who was eager to be the fittest to survive in his climb up the greasy pole to the prime ministry, took what is now seen to be a reactionary stand:

"Is man an ape or an angel?" he asked rhetorically, oversimplifying the debate. "I, my lord, I am on the side of the angels. I repudiate with indignation and abhorrence those newfangled theories."

lacocca's metaphoric mangling was quickly topped by James Baker, former secretary of state, who was reaching for some homespun trope in which to wrap criticism of Clinton policy toward Somalia. "At first it was all about helping the starving," he said, referring to the mission to Mogadishu that he and President Bush authorized. "Suddenly, it was sup-posed to be about building a nation, whatever that means, or chasing some chieftain." Baker character-ized this charge of purpose as "Someone comemberized this change of purpose as "Someone somewhere widened the goal pasts." He locked in the sports metaphor with "That was never the original goal." But Baker was reading from the wrong hymnbook. "Widening the goal posts makes the job easier," writes Mark Thompson, a Washington correspondent for Knight-Ridder newspapers. "Moving the goal posts (the standard metaphor) makes it more difficult (assuming, of course, they're moved away from the kicker)."

п

Here comes the Slur Patrol, spraying suppressing fire. Let's take a meeting on taking offense. "Use of the term philistinism," writes Daniel J.

Booser of Houston, "to denote 'smug, ignorant . . . antagonistic to artistic and cultural values' (American Heritage Dictionary) is offensive." He objects to this "derogatory ethnic term" that appeared in The New York Tunes Book Review; he equates "Philistines" with "Palestinians."

Philistine - one from Philistia, an ancient region from Jaffa to the Egyptian desert south of Gaza - is an adjective and ooun from the Assyrian word Pa-Insu, according to the Encyclopedia Britannica's 11th edition: in Greek and Latin, this term became Palaes-300 pounds, was our largest president. tina, and in English Palestine. The name was officially superscried by Israel in 1948, when Jews established a state, but required in use to describe a region by Arabs who renamed, or who left and demanded resettlement, Insels pre-ferred "Palestinian Arabs" rather than "Palestinians." because the use of the noun suggested nationhood, but that distinction has broken down. Because Palestinian shares a root with Phillsting it's easy to see why Palestimans take offense at the sense of the related word as "cultural inferior" or even "barbarian." I usually resist the language police, and surely this is an unintended shur, but it is a stur nevertheless; cultural elitists will just have to come up with a new word.

Now to fatties, a term with a two-century history that has come under heavy fire from those who would substitute a cuphemism. On the sitcom "Murphy Brown," a beavyset woman announces, "I prefer to think of myself as a person of size."

Karen Stimson, director of Largesse, a group that fights sizism, weighed in with this comment to The Associated Press: "Being fat has always meant being downwardly mobile, especially for women. Society discriminates against people of size." The phrase is bottomed on people of colar, an 18th-century term for "nonwhites" enjoying new popularity among those not pigmentally deprived. The related noun sizism or its variant weightism has been patterned on racism, sexism and ageism. The lexicographer Anne Soukhanov offers a 1991 variant reported in The Chicago Tribune: Shapeism, the charge made against anyone who calls anyone else shapely. (Like ageism, the noun shape-ism keeps its e before the suffix -ism.)

This latest twist of PC patois is defined under an entry in Sid Lerner and Gary S. Belkin's 1993 dictionary of current terms, "Trash Cash, Fizzbos and Flatliners." The adjective nonsizist refers to "language that seeks to be nonjudgmental in referring to a person's relative physical bulk. Words such as thin, sveite, large and fat can be regarded as undesirable in nonsizist language."

Fat is a description, not a slur. After Teddy Roose velt broke up the trusts, his presidential successor, William Howard Taft, softened the attack on big business with his most famous dictum: "Mere size is

"I wonder if

fun today

Sharing the day's events with loved ones back in the states has never been easier.

Whenever vorthe away simply dial the AT&F access number of the country you're calling from and an English-speaking 'U&F Operator or yorce prompt will put you through in seconds. You can bill the call to your AT&T than 1.5, local calling card, or call collect. You'll get commical AT&T rates and keep hotel surcharges to a minimum. It's all part of our continuing commutment to be there for you. Even when you're on the other side of the planet So suprise someone back home with a call. Who knows? Perhaps they'll have a little surprise for you
